

I am strongly opposed to any measures that would limit satellite radio's ability or incentive to improve its product and offer what its subscribers want. If broadcast radio is concerned about losing listeners, they should dedicate their efforts to improving their product rather than "encouraging" legislators to protect them through restrictive legislation. If lobbies such as the NAB and the like had their way in the past we would be without cable television, satellite television, and the world wide web, just to name a few. Restrictions on the ability for creative enterprises to develop and improve new products and technology go against everything this country is based upon. Please do not listen to the NAB and support satellite radio!
